4. The application furthers the intent of the proposed zoning district and the general purposes of these regulations.
5. 6. The ability of the City or other government agencies to provide any services, facilities or programs that may be necessary if the application is approved.
7. The effect of approval on surrounding property, including the likelihood that surrounding areas may be developed in accordance with current zoning or future plans.
8. The recommendations of professional staff or other reviews associated with the application.

Review Procedures. In addition to the general requirements in Table 2-1 and Section 2.01, the following requirements are specific to zoning map amendment applications.

1. Applications may be accompanied by one of the following complementary applications: a Site Plan, a Special Use Permit, or a Concept Plan of a similar nature to that required in Section 2.04 for Planned Developments.
2. Applications may be accompanied by any plat that is necessary for the project.

OWNER:

ADDRESS AND LANDMARK NAME:

216 N. Wall Avenue, Joplin, Missouri 64801
The Glover House

PRESENT USE:

Single Family Residential (Zoned R-3)

HISTORIC USE:

Single Family Residence

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION:

Date of Construction: Established 1895

Architectural Style: Victorian Folk Type

Construction: Date of construction is consistent with Victorian Era architectural style (1855-1910) and Folk architectural type likely best suited to classify the architecture as it is the most common type associated with the Victorian Style for modestly designed homes incorporating features of the archetypal subtypes of Victorian architecture. Noteworthy for this house, the construction is symmetrical, which in not typical for Victorian era except for Victorian Style Symmetrical Type architecture of the Second Empire Subtype. However, the modest home similarity to Second Empire ends there. The configuration of the roof would add argument to assigning the house to the Stick Type of Victorian Style, but asymmetrical front façade being such a prominent component of Stick Type, Staff feels confident the Folk Type Victorian is likely best suited to classify the house.

Site: Wilson & Hutton's 1st Addition to the City of Joplin, Lots 121.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE:

1. Its character, interest, or value as part of the development, heritage, or cultural characteristics of the community, county, state, or country;

   This category is typically not applied to single family homes being nominated for local landmark status.

2. Its location as a site of a significant local, county, state, or national event;

   Not applicable to this nomination

3. Its identification with a person or persons who significantly contributed to the development of the community, county, state, or country;

   Joseph Benning Glover, Jr. (First Owner) & brother Charles W Glover. Joseph was the owner of the Glover book & Paper Company at 302 S Main Street. Charles Glover was the owner of the Glover Book & Paper Company, while Charles Glover was associated with the Joplin Globe and noted for his many roles in early industry in the City's formative years following incorporation.

   Finding: The building meets the requirements of criteria 3 for its association with Joseph Benning Glover, Jr & Charles W Glover.

4. Its embodiment of distinguishing characteristics of an architectural style valuable for the study of a period, type, method of construction, or use of indigenous materials;

   The property has many Victorian features still remaining, also many removed, however the Folk type is a general classification of the Victorian Style that used to classify a home that cannot be classifies to the archetypes that embody the architectural style. Therefore this category would not typically be used for this architectural type.

5. Its identification as the work of a master builder, designer, architect, or landscape architect whose individual work has influenced the development of the community, county, state, or country;

   Not applicable to this nomination.

6. Its embodiment of elements of design, detailing, materials, or craftsmanship that render it architecturally significant;

   Not applicable to this nomination.

7. Its embodiment of design elements that make it structurally or architecturally innovative;

   Not applicable to this nomination

8. Its unique location or singular physical characteristics that make it an established or familiar visual feature;

Not applicable to this nomination.

9. Its character as a particularly fine or unique example of a utilitarian structure, including, but not limited to farmhouses, gas stations, or other commercial structures, with a high level of integrity or architectural significance; and/or

    Not applicable to this nomination.

10. Its suitability for preservation or restoration.

    Finding: The site meets the requirements for criteria 10 as staff would rate the integrity of the resource as fair or better.

Any structure, property, or area that meets one or more of the above criteria shall also have sufficient integrity of location, design, materials, and workmanship to make it worthy of preservation or restoration. (Ord. No. 86-31, ' 1, 3-17-86)

STAFF RECOMMENDATION:

Staff recommends The Glover house, located at 216 N. Wall Ave, be forwarded by HPC Resolution to the Planning & Zoning Commission, to be added to the HP zoning overlay, and be designated as a local landmark.

1. Its character, interest, or value as part of the development, heritage, or cultural characteristics of the community, county, state, or country: This home would be the second to receive a local historic designation in the Wilson & Hutton area and represents a unique and modest house example compared to the historic home at 220 N Pearl. The home passed to his daughter Inez White, then her daughter Charlotte McGuinness.

4. Its embodiment of distinguishing characteristics of an architectural style valuable for the study of a period, type, method of construction, or use of indigenous materials: The home is a good example of Folk Victorian style. 10. Its suitability for preservation or restoration: The house retains many unaltered original features including the hardwood floors which will be refinished. Original stained glass windows, doors and hardware, interior pocket doors, and stained wood trim and moldings throughout will remain preserved.

(Any structure, property, or area that meets one or more of the above criteria shall also have sufficient integrity of location, design, materials, and workmanship to make it worthy of preservation or restoration. Ord. No. 86-31, ' 1, 3-17-86)

JOPLIN GLOBE - AUG. 5, 1934

"Col." Glover, Pioneer, on Job at 80

"Work as Usual," His Birthday Code

Here we find "Col." Charles W. Glover as a brave fire laddie, and also in a distinguished pose as head of The Globe and News Herald's collection department. The photo of the gallant fireman was taken in 1870; the other only a short time ago.

For three score years identified with many phases of Joplin's growth—mining, banking, public utilities, merchandising and newspapers—a pioneer citizen of the community yesterday observed his eightieth birthday by quietly going about his duties as head of the collections department of The Globe and News Herald. He is Charles W. Glover, affectionately known as "Colonel" Glover to his associates.

Despite his advanced age, Mr. Glover has never relinquished any of his work to younger assistants. Daily he leaves his home at 216 North Wall street, where he resides with his wife and a daughter, Mrs. Inez White, to make his collections, attend to his desk and to keep intact a record of service on the newspapers that extends back to 1913.

Equally as interesting as the story of the development of Joplin from a mining camp to a city, as told by an eye witness who had a part in that growth, is the fund of anecdotes with which Mr. Glover regales his friends on occasion. They savor of the rough and ready existence of a frontier town, when Judge Lynch some times held court and only a "hog trail' led between East Joplin and the little settlement which now is Joplin's business district.

Born August 4, 1854, in Independence, Mo., Mr. Glover arrived in Joplin April 21, 1873, and took over the position of bookkeeper and cashier of the Joplin Mining and Smelting Company. The company had a small office perched on the hill just north of the eastern terminus of the present Broadway viaduct and mines where now stands Landreth park.

In 1877 the young business man succeeded H. G. Goodman as cashier of the Joplin Savings bank, remaining in that position until it liquidated in 1879. The bank, located next to the northeast corner of Broadway and Galena avenue, was closed as the business district moved to the new city across the valley, but it paid off every depositor in full.

Mining ventures and a sawmill in Salina, Colo., occupied Mr. Glover for the next three years, but he returned to Joplin in 1883 to become bookkeeper and foreman of the Joplin Zinc Company. The firm sold out to the Picher interests in 1886, and Mr. Glover became superintendent of the Joplin Water Company.

There he remained until 1891, when it was sold to eastern interests. He is no character in the early history of Joplin to match Taylor for sheer cousge, or for practical joking. One of his stories aptly illustrates the latter trait.

C. W. Towsley, a grocer; Logan Swope, Taylor and Mr. Glover went into nearby Kansas for a prairie chicken hunt, a common recreation. On the road, Taylor got to telling about the time he was cured of a rattlesnake bite by drinking quantities of buttermilk when no whisky was available.

That night the four slept in a barn and Taylor found to his satisfaction that there was plenty of buttermilk in the farmhouse nearby. He had a churn full of it set on the back porch.

In the middle of the night the jokester slyly dug a spur into Towsley's leg. As the latter, no doubt dreaming of reptiles, awoke with a scream, Taylor shouted: "Look at that big snake!"

The injured man waited for no more. He dashed out of the barn calling for whisky, but there was no liquor. Suddenly he espied the buttermilk. As his companions exerted tremendous self control to hold their chuckles, he drank it

There he remained until 1891, when it was sold to eastern interests, and then he took up mining in a series of private enterprises which were moderately successful. It was during that period that Mr. Glover happened to be strolling along Main street one afternoon when a crowd in the exclusive Fulton market, a grocery at 525 Main street, attracted him.

The place was going at auction and the bidding was well up in the $800 bracket when he entered. Mr. Glover didn't know much about the grocery business, but it looked like a good buy and he bid it in for $1,000. A week later he turned down $1,500 for the property.

He laughed as he recalled the experience.

"That store had some mighty pretty fixtures, all right, and the bon ton trade," he said. "But I soon found out that the fixtures scared away the cash buyers and the elite class of customers isn't always a good proposition. It cost me $2,000 to find that out. I sold it a year later."

Mr. Glover was married to Miss Gussie K. Keller at Lamar, September 21, 1893. Besides the dauhgter, they have two sons. Harold E. Glover is in the insurance business in Philadelphia, and R. R. Glover, owner of a floor coverings store in Atlanta, Ga. Harold Glover is here on a visit now.

The veteran mine operator recalls the days when "whims," early model horse hoists, were used to bring the ore up out of the ground. "Grubstaking" was a common practice, men of wealth matching their dollars against the experience of veteran miners. That all came to an end when the law was passed making any partner responsible for all debts contracted, and paved the way for the syndicate-controlled mining operations of today.

One Sunday night some fifty years ago, Mr. Glover entered Wishburn's restaurant to find himself a virtual captive among a group of fellow townspeople. Two nights before a man had swung from a tree for the alleged theft of a span of mules; the persons gathered in the cafe were the lynchers whom the law had spotted.

At midnight they fled the country en masse under cove. f darkness. It was only then at they permitted their young prisoner to go free, holding him for fear he would tip off the authorities.

That was only a minor encounter with outlawry, however, to what happened a short time later. Fletch Taylor, reputedly chief lieutenant to Quantrill of guerilla border warfare fame, and a friend of Mr Glover's, introduced him to three strangers in an outlying mining company office.

It was only after they had gone that Taylor told him the names were fictitious, that his callers were Cole, Jim and Bob Younger, notorious desperadoes. It was in Joplin that they recruited two men named Chadwell and Pitts (not with Taylor's aid, however) into their gang.

Mr. Glover maintains that there erted tremendous self control to hold their chuckles, he drank it down in great gulps. He never tired of telling afterward of how buttermilk saved his life.

Peter Schnur, editor of the old Joplin Herald, became his lifelong enemy after a similar incident, Mr. Glover relates. They were hunting near Redings Mill and the banks of Shoal creek were alive with muskrats. With a straight face, Taylor told his companion that only by diving in the water could one loosen the deadly grip of a muskrat.

That night he carefully pinned the body of a squirrel to Schnur's coat-tail and pressed the faithful spur into action. Wildly grabbing behind him, his victim envisioned a steel-jawed muskrat attached to his anatomy. He raced along the bank, dived into the creek and nearly drowned before the guffawing Taylor could pull him out.

Mr. Glover also recalled when he and several other young men of the mining camp formed a volunteer fire department back in 1873. They bought their own uniforms, which were featured by snappy helmets and fiery red shirts.

One clever youth in the bunch conceived the happy thought that the brave fire laddies should give a great social affair. They all agreed and it was a ball at the old Joplin hotel. Tickets were $5 each. Everything went off fine, it was a grand success in every way—except from a financial standpoint. The firemen lost $600 on the venture. Then the fire company disbanded.

Many another reminiscence, some humorous, some serious, such as the fire which wiped out part of East Joplin in 1874, are stored in Mr. Glover's remarkable memory. And his friends, stopping to extend congratulations yesterday, found as much pleasure in hearing them as he did in the telling.

THE MINERS BANK

Posted February 28th 2010 at 7:59 pm by Brown

As the riches of the mining fields of Jasper County drew investors, miners, and speculators in the 1870s, the need for a banking institution was obvious. One of the first men to step into this void was one of the fathers of modern day Joplin, Patrick Murphy, originally of Carthage. He and an associate established the town of Murphysburg, which later merged to form Joplin in 1873, and two years later, Murphy opened the Banking House of Patrick Murphy. A two story brick building, it was located on Main Street between Second and Third Streets. Murphy's endeavor was a success.

Such was the success that the financial institution attracted investors and in 1877, the Banking House of Patrick Murphy was re-chartered and organized as the Miners Bank of Joplin. Murphy served as the first president of the bank, and was followed by Thomas E. Tootle. The first head cashier was Frank Kershaw. Kershaw's successor was A.H. Waite. Most customers would have more likely known and recognized C.H. Spencer, who served as head cashier for at least sixteen years leading up to 1906. Local magnate Thomas Connor had served two terms as bank president. In fact, the board of directors included many of the wealthier citizens of the city, such as Connor, Howard C. Murphy, Edward Zelleken, C.W. Glover, and H.O. Bartlett.

Miners Bank's success was also reflected in its financial holdings. At its inception the bank held $25,000, by 1890 this was increased to $50,000 and a year later doubled to $100,000. Due to growth of its assets and the increasing number of depositors, Miners Bank moved from its location between Second and Third to take up residence to offices in the Joplin Hotel, and there remained from about 1885 to 1905. Over a slightly longer period of time than its stay at the Joplin Hotel, reported deposits at the bank grew from $35,700 to $949,000. Loans increased from $6,500 to $425,000. Cash on hand went from $15,000 to a bank robber's dream of $97,000. Figures from 1905 listed the six most successful banks by deposits, and the Miners Bank was first and foremost, besting its nearest competition by more than $55,000. Until the bank's move in 1905 from the Joplin Hotel, its chief competitor and runner up in the 1905 figures was the Joplin National Bank, located just across the intersection situated on the bottom floor of the Keystone Hotel.

The move in 1905 may have been prompted by the plans of Thomas Connor to raze the three story Joplin Hotel with plans to build a larger, grander establishment, or may simply have been due to the banking institution's success. The bank's new home was just a block away from Main Street, where Fourth Street intersected with Joplin Street. The new building was described by one of Joplin's paper as a "beautiful modern building, with elevators and all modern conveniences." The offices were equally beautiful and constructed of marble, tile and steel. Designed by August Michaelis, one of Joplin's most prolific and talented architects, the building was designed to accommodate an additional four more stories should the need arise. It was built at a cost of $125,000 by the firm of C.A. Dieter who later oversaw the construction the Connor Hotel.

From July 1st of 1905, Miners Bank inhabited the ground floor, leaving the upper floors open to paying tenants, architect Michaelis included, and remained there until 1930 when it merged with Conqueror First National Bank. After the merger, the bank moved back to Main Street for the first time in twenty-five years, and with its departure ended an illustrious history that began in 1877. The last home of Miners Bank remained in use until a disastrous fire prompted its demolition in 1982.

A RAINSTORM FLOODS JOPLIN – THE FLOOD OF 1916

Posted July 26th 2010 at 6:50 am by Brown

The last few weeks have been scorching hot in southwest Missouri. In 1916, however, a sudden cloudburst wreaked havoc upon Joplin that seems almost unreal.

A "severe electrical storm" began at 10:30 at night with a host of giant storm clouds that hovered over the city until they burst and flooded the city below.

The deluge began with 5 and ¾ inches of rain during the night, followed by 5 and ½ inches within a two hour period in the morning. The rain was accompanied by a savage hailstorm that forced pedestrians to run for shelter. The downpour continued throughout the afternoon and in just a few minutes more than an inch of rain had fallen. Total rainfall was estimated at 6 9/10 to 7 inches. Long time Joplin residents remarked that it was the most severe storm the city had experienced.

According to C.W. Glover of 216 North Wall Street, the rainstorm was nothing compared to one that ravaged Joplin in July, 1875. According to Glover, it rained for three days and three nights. Joplin Creek, which divided East Joplin from West Joplin, became a raging torrent that no one dared cross. Professor William Hartman, a musician, and his wife were drowned, and several others were almost lost when seeking shelter or attempting to rescue those endangered by the flood waters. Joplin's horse drawn trolley was unable to travel to Baxter Springs due to the washed out roads and streets.

The 1916 storm was so sudden that it caught many people off guard. John Moore, Edward Poe, and Peter Adamson, miners working in the Coralbut (formerly the Quaker) mine west of Chitwood, were drowned when rainwater swept down into the mine at such a furious rate that they were unable to escape in time. Unfortunately for the three miners, the water had pooled at the top of the mine behind piles of debris that had formed an old mine pond when the debris gave way and a torrent of water flooded the mine shaft.

Altogether there were twelve men in the mine and they scrambled on top of some boulders as the water began to rise. The hoisterman at the surface lowered a tub to rescue them, but the water was so high and the current so strong that the men were reluctant to jump across the water into the tub. Nine of the miners were able to escape before the water overtook them. Moore, Poe, and Adamson said they could not swim and thought they would be safe on top of the boulders. It was not before long, though, that the hoisterman heard them call for help. One of them yelled, "For God's sake, get a boat before we drown!" It was too late. They were unwilling to jump to the tub across the raging water and were drowned despite the efforts of their fellow miners to go down in the tub and try to reach them. The bodies of three men were not immediately located by rescuers.

One of the miners who escaped, Roy Clark, had been a sailor on a tramp steam freighter out of Queenstown. He declared after his harrowing experience that he was "through with mining." Clark, who claimed he had developed strong swimming skills as a sailor, said he would not have dared to swim through the water that had flooded the mine. Another miner who had been in the mine, C.E. Evans, said he had warned his fellow workers about the storm. He said he had picked up hailstones as big as his thumb that had fallen into the mine and knew that trouble was not far off. By the time they saw the water pour in and ran for the boulders, he said, the water was up to their waists and rising. The tub, he said, was slow in coming. Evans's fellow miner, Lowery, was standing on a boulder with water up to his chin when he was able to get to the tub.

Even those who were in the safety of their own home were not shielded from the storm. William Langley, a 70 year old gardener, drowned in his home at Second and Ozark streets when it was submerged by water due to the home being situated next to a steep draw that funneled water down into the house. When rescuers broke into Langley's home, they found that the water had been only six inches from the ceiling. Some families in Chitwood sought refuge on top of their homes as the water began to rise, while others remained in storm shelters, still afraid to venture out due to the lightning and hail of the past few hours.

Mines suffered damage. The Grace Mine mill, located a mile north of Chitwood, and the Longfellow school building were both hit by lightning. Mine owner W.H. Gross of 318 West Eighth Street estimated damages at $15,000. Several other mine buildings were struck by lightning but did not burn. Many more were filled with water and required large pumps to remove the water. Total damages for mines across the Joplin area were estimated at $200,000.

The storm of 1916 caused severe damage to downtown Joplin. Main Street from Fourth to Sixth streets was a "white-capped torrent for more than two hours" with a depth of two to five feet deep in some places. Businesses along this section of downtown reported losses of $100,000. Fleischaker Dry Goods, Christman's, and Ramsay's suffered severe flood damage. Ramsay's lost all of the merchandise stored in the building's basement which was filled with six feet of water at one point. Christman's reported $10,000 in losses. Merchandise located on the lower shelves of the stores was thoroughly soaked.

One odd occurrence was when a bolt of lightning struck two wax figures in the Menard Store located at 423 Main Street. One of the figures was completely melted while the other was only scorched on the arm.

At the Commercial billiard parlor at 521 Main Street, seven billiards tables were ruined. Not far down the street the Priscilla Dress Shop at 513 Main lost several expensive Parisian gowns valued at $3,000, artwork estimated to be worth $2,000, and $300 of electrical fixtures destroyed.

It seemed as if no business escaped the wrath of the storm. The Farrar-Stephens Auto Tire Company at 520 Joplin Street reported damages of $5,000 while Kresge 5 and 10 Store lost merchandise valued at $5,000. The Joplin Pittsburg Railway Company suffered $2,500 in losses. The Burke Cigar and Candy Store and the Electric Theater building only had $2,000 in damages. Even the vaunted House of Lords suffered $500 of damage.

Joplin's Hello Girls found that the storm caused $10,000 worth of losses. Nearly 4,000 telephones were out of service after the rain stopped, almost half of Joplin's total number of phones. Poles were down, wires severed, circuits dead, and fuses blown all over town. Long distance lines, however, received very little damage. Phone company officials considered it a miracle.

Bridges and roads were hit hard. At least two large bridges were washed out, including the Joplin and Pittsburg Railway Company bridge over Turkey Creek. Track was twisted and torn up and down the line. A "masonry bridge over Turkey Creek at Range Line" was supposed to have been totaled at a cost of $1,000. Trains from the Kansas City Southern, Frisco, and Missouri & North Arkansas railroads were unable to roll into Joplin.

One enterprising young man captured a bathtub that floated out of a plumbing shop and used it as a canoe to paddle through downtown. Others joined him in boats and canoes (undoubtedly those who enjoyed fishing on the Spring River) while others just waded into the torrential streams of water. Barrels, boards, and all sorts of other debris clogged the streets and alleys. Citizens worked to grab the debris before it smashed out store windows and created more damage.

Giant potholes waited to twist ankles for those who dared to walk through the muddy water. Motorists were asked by city officials to drive slowly lest they hit a pothole and total their cars. Sidewalks were washed out as were sections of wood block pavement from Main Street to the Frisco rail tracks. City parks were ravaged. A sewer main burst at the North Main street viaduct and created a health hazard.

Joplin was battered, but not broken. In time, debris was removed, mud swept away, and the ravages of nature relegated to memory.
